New Gas Well on Addison Side of Woodhull Field

A test of the area east of the proven Woodhull gas field is being started as Lycoming's well on the Bates farm has been sunk to about 200 feet. The Bates is nearly a mile east of the eastern row of wells which include the Tubbs, Hathaway and JabeJohnson. Interest in the venture will be high, as wells on the east of the proven field have been smaller, indicating the sand is "tighter in that section. Gas men are asking each other whether production will pinch off altogether. The last well finished on the eastern side of the field, the John Allen, measured only 7 million feet. While wells at the western side have run more than 20 million in several instances.

Other new locations reported in the field are the Earl Rosencrans farm, now the Charles Crane, three miles east of Woodhull on the Addison road. Another has been on the Eva Groves farm on Pulteney Hill. Several other wells are expected to start now that the winter season is nearing its end to increase the activity of the field.

Valuable Hen Lays Two Eggs a Day

LaRue Symonds, who keeps a large flock of white leghorn hens has one of greater value than the others of the flock. The eggs were perfectly formed and had soft shells which were connected by a piece of similar shell about an inch long and as large around as a lead pencil.

Modern Education Presented in New Light Before Ad Club

Superintendent Vanderhof of Bath presents several questions in education—Gives them a challenge and outlines past and present — Dinner served in Episcopal Church.

Education was revealed in a new light to members of the Advertising Club of Addison by Superintendent of Schools W. H. Vanderhof of Bath. He spoke at the Wednesday noon luncheon of the club held in the Episcopal Church. A roast beef dinner was served by the women of the Auxiliary. Dr. Amos G. Stiker presided as song leader. President Charles L. Crane announced the program chairmen as follows: March 9, the Rev. Albert H. Head; March 23, Walter M. Goff; April 6, Maurice E. Miller and April 20 Will B. Leete. Milton Crane was in charge of the meeting this week.

Education and Our Ideals

Mr. Vanderhof said: "I am going to try to give you a picture of the past, present and some ideas of the future in education. The first duty of education is to make good citizens. American schools represent the unfolding of the ideals of the people. It began meagerly and has grown according to the wants, needs and desires of the people. Contrast this with the imposed education in Russia, Italy and Germany where there is no flexibility in curricula.

"Our education is local and the outgrowth of the character of our communities and indicate what the parents and communities value most. Our school reveals a paradox. The fundamental principal is to preserve the sanctity of the individual and the other ideals back of American education is to teach the responsibility of the individual to the group. This paradox seems unreal.

"We hope to develop all the talents of a child to the highest degree and at the same time develop those talents so the youth may take his place with his neighbors and do the best job he can to be a useful member of the group for the welfare of the group.

"American education is typified by three general heads: elementary, secondard and college. There are some new ones coming in which I will describe. Now, theoretically, you can start at the lowest and work your way through all levels.

Elementary Developments

There are new developments in the elementary level. Kindergartens have crept in. They came to us from Europe in 1850 where they were first established in 1816. In 1926 over 700,000 were in kindergartens and now nearly two million.

Nursery School

"More recently there has come the nursery school or child development school. There are many social and health needs for the child from two to five years of age and experiments are being conducted with children one and one-half years of age. This is elemental or purely primitive education. It is impossible to predict what is coming. The public school system may be forced to take in this group owing to the social and economic conditions of women in industry, slum conditions in the cities, disintegration of the home life through divorce and deaths.

Great Change in High School

"The most spectacular changes in education are in the secondary or high schools. In 1900 there were 500,000 in high schools and now there are nearly four million. The increase in material wealth, fewer opportunities and legal restrictions on child labor have brought this increase about. Another change is in the curricula for in 1890 there were nine courses in high school, in 1928 there were 47.

Junior High School

New branches have been established in the junior high school. This was first tried in Rochester in 1915. The junior high combined the seventh, eighth and ninth grades. The seventh and eighth grades have always been review grades for the children in school and a review of all that has gone before.

Methodist Men Present Comedy Thurs. and Fri.

"Two Days to Marry", a rollicking three-act comedy will be presented by the men of the Methodist Church Thursday and Friday nights in the village hall. Members of the cast have been practicing for several days in preparation for this show, which is being staged to raise funds for the church and club activities. One production a year is usually staged under the club auspices for this purpose.

Members of the cast are: Simon Chase played by Sam Fowler; Eliza Jane Pink, Mrs. Sam Fowler; Ruth McShane, Vivian Jacobson; James J. Dare, Walter Perkins, Jr.; Sadie L. Bois, Mrs. Chester Arnett; Rufus B. Sawyer, Carl Rouse and Walter M. Blair, Roy Omelion. Many of these characters are well known to local followers of home talent shows by reason of previous performances. Charles F. Johnson is director.

The story centers around a young fellow of 28 who learns that his father died and left $1,000,000 with the stipulation that the son marry. The son is not notified of this codocil in the will until two days before the expiration day. He scurries around and marries, but finds that he marries a girl younger than he should have as provided by the will. The plot hinges around his attempt to keep an uncle executor in ignorance of his mistake.

CONDITION IMPROVED

The condition of Mrs. Nathan House who submitted to an operation at Corning Hospital the latter part of last week is reported to be satisfactory.

Hi-Lights and Shadows of the Week's News

Administration leaders have given up hope of passing the anti-lynching bill. Another attempt to force limited debate in the Senate yesterday lost by a big margin. Southern Senators who have been talking the measure, to death are sure their job is finished.

Governor Lehman's state budget of nearly 387 million dollars was passed by both houses of the legislature. The budget is near 15 millon less than that of a year ago.

The U. S. navy has declared a ban on information concerning building of the country's new ships. Formerly periodic reports have been made of the progress of construction, but owing to the tense situation over naval rivalry with Japan the U. S. will conceal further building news.

A great battle is in progress in central China. A big Japanese army is pressing from both north and south endeavoring to cut off Chiang Kai Shek's troops from the western contacts of China. Chinese are fighting stubbornly against odds.

Nazi forces have gained control in Austria. Recently Hitler held a conference with the Austrian leader who has been opposed to Nazism, and the former evidently talked his southern neighbor into an alliance.

The New York Assembly again killed the so called child labor amendment this week by and over whelming vote. The count was 104 against 40 for as both Democrats and Republicans turned thumbs down on the measure to give congressional authority over American children. Guy Cheney and William Stuart assemblymen from Steuben voted against the amendment .

Faced by the belief Japan is building three battleships of some 43,000 tons each, the U. S. may start work on huge warships of as great or greater tonnage mounting 18 inch guns. The Japs politely informed our State Department it was none of their business what size ships Nippon built, which was

'Seeing America' Fr. Head's Topic For Civic Club

New views of familiar scenes might well be termed the topic of the talk given by the Rev. Albert H. Head, vicar of the Chapel of the Redeemer before the women of the Civic Society held Friday afternoon in the Presbyterian Church. The talk developed out of American geography and history for the speaker pointed out the value of "Seeing America First" and viewing American historic and literary shrines and geographic places of interest before viewing those abroad. He spoke of the countless numbers who brag of visiting the homes or graves of famous characters of literature or history abroad and yet have never visited Mt. Vernon, Springfield, Ill., Gettysburg or Washington. Personal anecdotes from his travels on three continents were given by the speaker to bear out his statements.

Mrs. Lynn Taylor was in charge of the program and Mrs. Alfred Chatfield, vice president, presided in the absence of the president.

Large Group at F. F. A. Father and Son Banquet Thursday Night

More than 100 were seated at the father and son banquet of the Addison High school Future Farmers group held in the local school Thursday evening. Paul Orvis. director of Agriculture at the State College at Alfred was the guest speaker of the evening. Bill Colburn, president of the Addison F. F. A. acted as toastmaster. Other speakers were Irving Gladstone, supervising principal of Addison High School, Tom Lyons, Charles L. Crane, William Stewart, Kenneth Armstrong and Frank Finnerty.

The dinner was served by girls of the Home Making Department of the school, under the direction of their teacher, Miss Bethel Caster. The Rev. John V. Axtell, pastor of Addison Presbyterian Church led community singing. Miss Janet Taylor played the accompaniments.

The toastmaster introduced Mr. Gladstone who welcomed the group, saying in part:

I am glad to welcome you people from outside the limits of the village to this gathering. A few weeks ago many of you were entertained here at the dairymen's meeting. We believe this school building should be a community center used by all the people surrounding Addison. We want to have this building used and there is no better way than an occasion like this. I cannot imagine a thing like this having happened when I was in high school. School in those days was all work and you never would have found boys gathering in a meeting like this with their fathers.

"Now we try to make school work attractive and interesting to the students, and I wouldn't be at all surprised if you missed your boys, if you found them here. They like to come to school. We have fine facilities here, the boys like their work and like to be here."

Tom Lyons gave a list of accomplishments of the Addison F. F. A. for the year. "We are proud of the accomplishments of the Addison F. F. A." he said. "At the Bath Fair we entered in competition against all the ag schools of Steuben, and won more prize money

This Week In Sports

Schoolboy Rowe is visiting Mickey Cochrane, Detroit manager, for a few days. However, he does not expect to be signed up for a full time contract with Detroit until he proves that his lame arm is in pitching shape. He has been rowing a boat to keep in trim. The club physician who has had charge of the arm since it went bad in '36 will have to give his O. K. before Rowe is signed up, but a Detroit osteopath says the old soupbone is alright.

Fielding "Hurry Up" Yost, long athletic dictator of Michigan's football destinies, is on the way out according to indications brought about by the university's engaging of Fritz Crisler as football coach and professor. Princeton released Crisler when he asked for his release to take up his new job. Developments in the Wolverine camp will be watched with interest.

Tad Weiman, once an assistant coach at Michigan, Campbell Dickson, once Chicago investigator for the Secret Six and end coach at Wisconsin in his spare time and Earl Martineau, former all-American assistant to Noble Kizer at Purdue have all been Chrisler's assistants at Princeton. It is a question whether they will remain at Princeton, be offered the head coach's job or go with Crisler to Michigan.

Cornell's basketball championship hopes were shattered before junior week crowds here Saturday afternoon when Penn's team took them across 51 to 45. Cornell's squad has been in second place in the Intercollegiage League and was a favored team over Penn. However, a couple of substitutes upset the apple cart.

Joe McCarthy left his Buffalo home to converse with Col. Jake Ruppert about all the Yankee holdouts. Nothing of their conversation has been made public. The Yanks have the greatest bunch of high class holdouts of any squad in either major league so far this season. It looks as though more beer money will have to be spent to keep the team active this season.

I noticed in recent trotting news accounts that Greyhound, who will become six years old this season, is scheduled to break the world's record for the mile, now clocked at 1:55. This horse always attracts a large following on any track. State fair devotees are expected to see the horse in action.

Addison Merchants Take Eagles— Play Blackhawks Here Friday

The Addison Merchants took a hectic decision from St. Casimir's Eagles of Elmira Friday night by a margin of three points. The game was anybody's right up to the last half minute of play with the 43 to 40 score indicative of the closely matched teams that fought it out.

Addison drew first blood when Robbins looped one in from under the basket, but the visitors went into the lead soon afterwards and held it until near the end of the first quarter when Addison forged ahead only to have the Eagles come back for a 11 to 11 tie as the initial period ended.

The visitors were carrying the fight to their opponents in the next period, their speed seeming to make up for the loss in height and weight between the two outfits. But under the basket it was a different matter, Addison having all the best of the fray and holding the Eagles to two cripplies. With three minutes left in the first half the locals were deprived of the services of their rangy center, Hargrave, who twisted an ankle and was forced to leave the game. With Wilson working for the evening the only relief man left on the squad was Allen, and it was a case of do or die for dear old Rutgers, Percy. And Percy did. Addison led 19 to 17 when the mishap occurred and the team appeared inspired to the limit by the loss. Allen stuck to his man like a leech, refusing to be sucked out of position and rushing and yelling every time his opponent tried a "set" shot, causing the latter to miss repeatedly. In the remainder of the period Addison made two more baskets from the field to Elmira's one and increased the lead to 23 to 19.

In the next period the Eagles outscored Addison to tie it at 28 all as the game went into the last canto. Hargrave then returned to the game and the Merchants put on a sharp rally. J. Mekos cut his head when he bumped into the brick wall under the Addison basket, being removed from the game. Addison jumped the score to 43-37 when John Grange looped a long shot that whizzed through the meshes, but the visitors were still fighting and cut the lead three points with a free throw and one from the field. Addison kept the ball down at the home end of the court the last 50 seconds, but the Merchants were as glad as the Eagles were sorry to hear the final whistle.

Robbins led the scoring with 18 points, Grange accounting for 12. For the Eagles Witucki led with 13 while Stachowski had 8.

The score would not have been close, but for the dead-eye shooting of the Elmirans from points outside the 25-foot radius, the locals preferring to let them pop the ball from a distance and guard closely under the basket. In close quarters Bill Miller was a tower of strength to the Addison defense. Most of the time he kept the visitors from shooting under the basket, and when they did toss one up he was up on the board to take the rebound.

The victory gives Addison a fine start in the second round of play for the league flag. Another rip-snorting contest is scheduled for Friday night when the Elmira Blackhawks come to True gymnasium. Addison beat the Blackhawks in Elmira, but they have been greatly strengthened by three new stars including Flynn and Wolf. This game will have a great bearing on the outcome, and Addison will be out to win.

Track Meet to Bring Many School Athletes to Cornell

Ithaca, Feb. 14—The first annual Cornell Interscholastic Indoor Track Meet will be sponsored by the CUAA on the afternoon of March 19 when high school and prep school stars from all over the nation will assemble in Cornell's huge drill hall.

Preliminary experiments by Spiked Shoe, track association, indicated that interest in the event was wide, and the Cornell Athletic Association has announced its intention to sponsor the meet as an annual event.

Entries from more than twenty schools during the first days of registration indicate that many young athletes will be taking advantage of the meet, which is one of the few of its kind in the country and the first to be held at Cornell.

Trophies will be awarded by the Athletic Association to the high-scoring team in the prep school class and the high team in the high school group, and there will be individual medals for the first three place winners in each event.

There will be competition in eleven events: the 75-yard dash; 440-yard, and mile runs; high jump, broad jump; pole valut; 12-pound shot put; and 880-yard relay.

The school athletes will have no expenses while they are in Ithaca. They will be the guests of the Athletic Association during their stay here, and they will be invited to attend the Syracuse-Colgate-Cornell indoor track meet in the evening.

Prep schools which will send entrants include Hercersburg, Newark Academy, Bordentown Military Institute, University School in Cleveland, and Christian Brothers Academy in Syracuse. Among the high school teams will be Binghamton Ceneral, Ithaca, Cato, Cortland, Utica, Roselle Park, N. J., Kearney High in Arlington, N. J., and four schools from Buffalo.

Robert J. Kane, assistant track coach is in charge of arrangements and entries for the meet.

LOG of the U.S. MARINES

SINKING OF THE MAINE

Flickering lights flashed over Havana Harbor where the U. S. S. Maine lay at anchor on the night of February 15, 1898. Over the quiet reaches of the bay came the musical notes of "Taps", destined never again to be sounded by a young marine who was performing his last official duties for the day.

Suddenly a terrific explosion all but tore the vessel apart, while death, agony, flames and smoke took command. More than 260 lives were snuffed out, but the living who remained on the decks of the doomed ship displayed remarkable discipline and order.

At the time of the explosion Private William Anthony, of the U. S. Marines, was the orderly to Captain Charles D. Sigsbee who was in his cabin. The lights were immediately obscured and the compartment filled with smoke. There was immediate and intense darkness.

Fully aware that the ship was about to sink, Anthony rushed from the comparative safety of the open deck into the darkened passage of the doomed vessel to find his captain. Every instinct of the man urged him to seek his own safety. The call to duty proved stronger. He groped his way to Captain Sigsbee and said: Sir, I have to report that the ship has been blown up and is sinking".

Discipline was superb. Magazines were flooded, boats which remained were lowered and every able-bodied member of the crew did his part, even though threatening flames and minor explosions still harrassed the vessel. The ship was finally abandoned the Stars and Stripes was raised over the shattered hulk.

Courageout men responded to the emergency even as they did during the bombing of the ill-fated Panay in China, and for long afterward "Remember the Maine" was a national slogan.

The Rambler

Are you in fashion with a cold in your nose and head? It seems every other person has one. Pardon me me while I sneeze.

—o—

Despite the fact it is a quiet election year, get out for the caucuses Saturday night and for the election next month. If you don't get out and express yourself, don't kick at the candidates who are elected nor at their actions for you had your chance.

—o—

Dix Curtis is quite a "slumgullion" maker. Attended an affair at the Episcopal Guild Hall Monday night at which he was the cook. It was good too. Incidentally got quite a kick out of big husky engineer Pete Laffkas, club president, reading Valentine verses.

—o—

One of the local officials chided me on the fact that I published a criticism of the lack of manners on the part of many local young people. And immediately four persons told me of lack of manners on the part of high school boys and girls. Three of the great criticisms seem to be: lack of respect for their elders, thoughtlessness and unnecessary loudness. If the kids get mad at me, I'm sorry, for I'm only repeating what was told to me. And as I asked the official; how many of the boys, who do wear hats, tip them to girls and women on the street? He did not reply.

Joe Sprague, music director at school, went to a faculty party in the American House recently and then went to bed for a week. Either Joe can't take it or the other teachers are too tough for him.

—o—

Considering the number of students in the senior class there did not seem to be too much parents interest in the meeting of Senior Parents Tuesday night in high school to plan for the trip to Washington. And in many cases, many of the absentees are kicking themselves for not going owing to what happened.

—o—

That's all.

Modern Education Presented to Club

Improvements in elementary teaching has made this review period unnecessary. The junior high school enriches the curricula and enables a student to try out for it fits the child to determine for himself what he desires. It also cuts the failures in high school.

Junior high schools have also brought men into the teaching picture at an age when the adolescent boy needs guidance. Boys spent years before at the feet of women teachers, many of whose personalities clash with the students.

Departmental Work

This sytem has also departmentalized school work and teachers can teach subjects in which they are interested and in which they are specialists. We, in Bath, have tried this down to the fourth grade with success. This has decreased failures which are too costly to taxpayers.

Junior College

"The junior college idea is also new, being evolved in 1922. This goes two years beyond the high school. This does not find public support in our state education department. Collegiate centers were forerunners of this idea, but different in principle. Those made possible free college education for those unable to finance their way through college or through four years of college." Outstanding examples of collegiate centers and junior colleges were presented.

He continued, "The idea behind junior colleges is not to train people for the professions or take the place of the private college, but to prepare students for nurses, welfare work, stenography and semi-skilled trade.

Adult Education

"Another improvement in education is the adult education program, the surface of which has just been scratched. Social and industrial changes have brought about shorter hours and given adults increased leisure time. Adult courses were first starfted to blot out illiteracy, but there are still 400,000 illiterates in the United States It was then developed to teach vocations and then as a filler for leisure time.

"The most outstanding development in adult education was in Des Moines, Ia., where Dr. Studebaker, now United States Commissioner of Education, developed the public forum. This taught a tolerance for an understanding of political, social and economic problems. Over 90,000 attended the courses held nightly for one and one-half hours September to June. This proved it is possible to control public discussions.

Social Science

"Changes in courses have developed along with structural changes. The high school is organized to cultivate social intelligence. This is based on social studies such as history, sociology, economics and politics. Other social studies are personal finance, proper dates for young people, proper clothing, organization of finances to enable them to accept positions of responsibility in organization work in their communities, know how to make selves attractive. All of these are necessary in our changing world.

Biological Sciences

"The biological sciences to teach health, for without health a person is no good to society, teach mental hygiene and community health, which is bigger than self. The story of life itself should be taught". He told of an experiment being made in Bath. He sent 422 letters to parents asking if they would favor sex education in the high school by the school doctor, health nurse and physical education director and 401 replies favored the teaching were received and four letters opposing it.

Physical Sciences

Superintendent Vanderhof favors teaching the physical sciences for he said, "Teach storms, fog, radio, electricity, motion pictures, automobiles, story of cellophane, photo electric cell refrigerator and the things they are using and talking about in every day life.

Fine Arts

"I left the fine arts to last, for I am keenly interested in this, having been a professional musician for 20 years. About 90 per cent of the students in our schools are getting their only opportunity to study, participate in and appreciate music. Teach art, poetry, appreciation of good literature, the adventures in travel to museums, libraries and other places of intellectural and cultural interest.

Improving the Movies

"It may interest you to know that 11 million children under 14 attended movies last year. Is this a thing which sould be countenanced? If the Advertising Club could do nothing else but get the manager of the local theatre to put on good motion pictures on Saturday morning instead of wild west, murder or other sensational pictures, then you will have justified your existence.

Changes Proposed

"Some changes I forecast are that we will lose the grade system of education and get ungraded classes where the pupil can go as far and as fast as his talents will permit him. I would not teach arithmetic until the seventh grade, and this may sound like heresy. But the child will learn to make change from experience, tell time. The child does not know the application of things we are teaching and at 14 or 15 in the seventh or eighth grade he would see the value of and want to know more.

No Grade Schools

"Knowing where to get information is more important than burdening yourself with useful information you may never use. In the classes of ungraded children there would be no failures to give children an inferiority feeling of failure which affect their whole life. It will be our jobs as teachers to keep a child up to the level capacity.

"We are preparing for a new type of social order in which education must keep pace. The American type of education has brought this country through its trying times and enabled our form of government to continue and will bring us through other troublous times". The speaker was given a rising vote of thanks.

The speaker was the Rev. Garland G. Lacey of the Methodist Church, speaking at the weekly assembly period Friday. The talk was in honor of Abraham Lincoln and George Washington, both men being born in the month of February.

Miss Betty Perry and Edward Sprague were song leaders in the absence of music supervisor Glenn Sprague. Irving R. Gladstone, principal, announced that a representative of the Rochester Business Institute will be the speaker on the program Friday of this week.

Mr. Gladstone also spoke about the importance of roll call. He advised students to be in their home rooms five minutes before the final bell in the morning.

The Silver Knight was awarded to the sophomore class with an average of 275 points in attendance, honor roll membership and sale of Reflectors, the school paper. The junior and senior classes were tied for second place with 150 points each and the freshmen had 100 points for last place. The award was made by Bernard Wilson of the faculty.

The Rev. Lacey was then presented and said in part: "Washington and Lincoln are two men who are perpetually adored and revered by their countrymen and are admired in every land. It is fitting and proper in this month of their birth to call to our minds their deeds and lives.

"I was schooled in another country and under another flag. Yet the first story I heard in my childhood was that of George Washington and the cherry tree. Washington had courage, honesty, accuracy and thoroughness. And these make for success in people wherever found. The inspirational story of his life from farm to soldier to general to President is told in the loaded book shelves of your library and provide inspiration for the reader.

"Three-quarters of a century after the birth of Washington the man destined to become the sixteenth president of the United States was born in a log cabin. Washington was the founder of our nation and Lincoln the preserver. Lincoln had few privileges except the privilege of hard work. He plodded on with only one year's schooling and against great odds. He was generous, courteous, courageous and patient. He saved the Republic and gave liberty to the black man.

"Lincoln died for you and for the privileges you enjoy. Think what privileges you have. Society spends $9,000 on your education and what are you going to do to return that investment? Gandi once started an address to a college graduating class by calling them traitors and rotters unless they returned to society what had been given them. Many great people have done many things for us and we have not returned what we have taken.

"The needs today are as great as in Lincoln's day. And unless we use our education, power and zeal and build up the social structure which some are seeking to destroy, we are traitors. Society is decaying, things and people are undermining it. Students of worth must realize their responsibilities. They must be inspired to follow in the footsteps of Washington and Lincoln.

"We cannot all be as great as they and others who followed after them. But they had men associated with them, men not in the public eye, men who were unknown and yet essential elements in their success. You and I may be essential elements in thinking straight on national issues and do the best you can."

He illustrated his talk with several stories relative to the characters about whom he was speaking. Mr. Gladstone thanked Mr. Lacey on behalf of the students and faculty.

BENEFIT FOR ALL

Americans are frequently accused of going to too many dinners and banquets at which they listen to too many speeches. Yet despite the possibility there may be some truth in that general allegation, it is doubly true that a lot of good should come out of the dinner held at the Addison High School building last Thursday. The Future Farmers father and son banquet offered an opportunity for fathers of boys in the Agriculture courses at Addison of hearing from an authority a great deal about what the future holds in store for their boys. And the boys themselves had unfolded to their ears the curtain which shields tomorrow, yet not too thickly for Paul Orvis to tell the many fields of service that Ag boys may profitably enter in the coming years.

Aside from the instructive side of this dinner and the talks given with it, there was a benefit to every person there which is hard to describe in words. Here was a group of honest-to-goodness dirt farmers—men who in many cases have been forced to make their progress in the difficult way, learning in the school of hard knocks—seeing with their own eyes, and hearing with their own ears the methods by which their sons can go forward in the new day of agriculture.

For every thinking person now firmly believes that out of this bedlam of change which has gripped the country for several years, will issue a new and better era for all who patiently till the soil. Out of the period of hard times that have made farming a bitter hazard so long, will grow developments of chemical agriculture that will create a huge demand for products of the soil for industrial purposes. And these industrial demands will return us to the day when farmers will reap the benefits of good prices for their products, without the obnoxious governmental regulations so many honest farmers have considered the bane of their lives.

In the group of farmers at the dinner there were doubtless more than a few who had never been in this community building, never had had the opportunity of seeing or understanding what Addison High School really means to the people around this village. This school was built by the people of the village of Addison with an unselfish spirit, in that it was built large enough to provide academic educational facilities for the boys and girls in the greater community around the village, as well as the boys and girls inside this corporation. It is the only school within a radius of twelve miles or more around Addison which offers to the boys in the country the opportunity to study agriculture.

Farmers of this vicinity who came with their sons to the father and son banquet could see for themselves that Addison High School offers a warm welcome to their children who are ready for academic schooling. They are a large part of the program of this school and Addison High School has become as much THEIR school as it is the school of village students. Further, in adding the Department of Agriculture to the courses of study in Addison High School, the school trustees provided a trained leader in the courses who goes out into the country and is ready to assist local farmers with their problems, as well as to teach their boys.

Indeed, the dinner last Thursday was an event which should be well remembered by folk both without and within the village. It is an event which should be repeated frequently. For there is a community of interests between the people on the outside of this village and the people inside its limits which can be developed for the benefit of all.

ON OUR WAY!!!

Many persons have been led to believe that the Federal government trimmed expenditures during the past year. Such is decidedly not the case. Expenditures have risen steadily (exclusive of the veterans' bonus in 1936) for the past nine years. Of late, government revenues leaped to record levels, managed to narrow the deficit margin and thus create a financial illusion that is dangerously misleading; for normally, smaller deficits would indicate actual economy.

Take for instance the regular operating expenditures of the Federal government, which include legislative, judicial and civil establishments. They rose from $637,000,000 in 1933 to $814,000,000 in 1937. Likewise consider for a moment Public Works, which includes such items as public highways, reclamation, flood control, public building, etc. This rose without halt from $458,000,000 in 1933 to over $1,000,000,000 in 1937.

And there is a popular belief that relief spending was recently rigidly curtailed. Yet official financial statements show that from 1937, expenditures for unemployment relief, which include direct relief, work relief and the Civilian Conservation Corps, also rose without halt from $359,000,000 to $2,466,000,000.

If you do not believe these figures, take a look at the total estimated Federal debt for the end of fiscal 1939 — $38,528,000,000. Compare this to the total debt in 1931—$16,801,000,000. It takes no mathematical genius to see where the country is headed. And at the rate we are going it won't take long to get there!

CHICKENS COME HOME TO ROOST

The New Dealers since their entry into Washington have had a lot so say about the "do nothing" policy of President Hoover when the depression broke following 1929. But now the Roosevelt depression has been taking us back to the depths for nearly six months and the present Chief Executive has not yet admitted its existence by name, let alone he has done nothing tangible to end a condition brought about by his own administration.

To be sure he asked employers to hold up wage scales (at the same time bring down prices) to hold up the spending powers of the laboring man. But no mature person who has a clear picture of events the last ten years can forget that Mr. Hoover appealed strongly to employers during the early days of the depression not to lower wages. And figures show that during the first three months of the Roosevelt depression prices of securities fell far more rapidly than they did in more than a year following the autumn of 1929.

To be sure Mr. Roosevelt invited the big figures in business and the little figures in business to come to Washington and suggest ways of ending his depression (not by that name though). And the big business men came and frankly told him what needed to be done—confidence of the country must be restored in various ways they suggested. The little business men came and they suggested what the Administration should do to restore confidence, but the counsel of big business and little business, which was singularly alike, fell on deaf ears. It was the same as if they had not spoken. The President is not willing that any of his reform measures which have precipitated the new depression shall be called the failures that they should be named by abandonment.

And so the President does nothing to end the Roosevelt depression, as he accused Mr. Hoover of doing nothing to end a depression which started from world-wide conditions. Verily "chickens do come home to roost".

CURING CANCER WITH PATENT MEDICINE

As outstanding economists have pointed out, the undistributed profits tax (a Roosevelt pet dream) has probably done more than anything else to prevent investment and industrial expansion, promote unemployment, and force the business slump. A close second in its adverse effect on the nation is the capital gains levy, which has caused hundreds of millions of dollars to become frozen in tax-exempt securities, or in non-productive bank accounts.

Measures have now been offered Congress in an attempt to do something about these dangerous, depression-making taxes. While the motives behind them may be good, the measures themselves are on a par with a patent medicine.

The proposal affecting the undistributed profits tax would exempt all corporations earning $25,000 a year or less. However, large business furnishes the bulk of employment in this country, the bulk of dividends, the bulk of regular taxes, and the bulk of opportunities for capital investment. The measure would give these businesses practically no relief whatsoever. It is reliably estimated that 14 or 15 per cent of the corporations listed in the country provide 85 per cent of all corporate employment. No revision of the undistributed profits tax that does not remove the punitive burdens placed against mere size can be of material service to recovery.

The pending measure dealing with the capital gains tax is similarly ineffective. It makes very slight concessions over the existing law, and would be of almost no influence in releasing frozen money into productive industry and private employment. In brief, the menace that is implicit in these two taxes cannot be eliminated without either outright repeal or radical revision.

THE PUBLIC GRAB BAG

"As the economic functions of the Federal government have increased, it has become increasingly clear that our Congressmen are primarily agents of their districts and their states, seeking to get what they can for their constituents almost without regard to the national welfare".—A. Parker Bates, in Readers' Digest.—To which we might add, the people back home are to blame. If citizens would only look at the evil of the "grab bag" system from a long time view-point we would have better government.

The Securities and Exchange Commission recently adopted new rules to govern short selling of stock. Commenting on this, President Gay of the New York Stock Exchange said: "These new rules represent, in my opinion, a sincere effort on the part of the Commission to deal with these problems . . . They will be tried with a genuine desire on our part to cooperate". He further pointed out that the problem is being studied by the Twentieth Century Fund at the instance of the Exchange.

This is a good example of how Exchange officials work to protect the public.

The Inquiry About Japanese Naval Power

By WALTER LIPPMANN

It is something of a relief to hear so promptly from Japan that she has no plans for building 43,000-ton battleships. For the building of such enormously large ships armed with very big guns would intensify the race of armaments immeasurably and create a truly dangerous situation in the Pacific.

The Japanese naval authorities have no doubt realized why it is a matter of vital importance to us that we should know whether such ships are to be built. For while to the layman the difference between sixteen-inch guns and eighteen-inch guns may seem like a mere matter of two inches, two inches on a gun, like two inches on the end of a man's nose, may make all the difference in the world. The naval battles of the great war demonstrated rather conclusively that when ships with big guns meet ships with smaller guns, the smaller ships cannot even run away. The ships with the big guns can lie outside the range of the smaller guns and sink the other ships without taking any risk whatever.

So if we are going to have any navy in the Pacific, it is essential that we should know that it is not unexpectedly going to run into a super-navy. That is why Secretary Hull had to ask Japan for information and that is why if the promised reply is not sufficiently clear, the United States will have to start building these horribly expensive naval monsters.

Domei, the Japanese news agency, reports that a formal reply will be made to Secretary Hull's inquiry but that details of the building program will not be disclosed. This is a pity. For what good can it possibly do Japan to practice the kind of secrecy which breeds suspicion and will provoke the United States into adopting a policy of continued expansion? Surely, the Japanese cannot imagine that they can secretly outbuild the United States, or that they can benefit themselves by making the attempt.

For Americans are bound to ask why Japan needs secretly to expand her navy. So far as we know from what the Japanese say and do they are supposed to be entirely concerned with China and Soviet Russia. Now neither China nor Russia has a navy, and therefore it is not credible that an expanded navy has anything directly to do with Chiang Kai-shek or with Stalin, with the Kuomintang or the Comintern.

Has it something to do, then, with a Japanese fear that the United States might intervene in China? It is possible the Japanese may have such a fear but even if they have it, it is hard to understand the policy of secrecy and competition. When one recalls how Mussolini held the British at bay in the narrow waters of the Mediterranean with nothing much more than airplanes, submarines, and small ships, it seems hard to believe that the Japanese need a much greater navy to protect themselves in Asiatic waters. They know perfectly well that the American fleet is utterly incapable of crossing the Pacific and giving battle so far from its base.

Obviously, Japanese-American relations have taken a bad turn and every effort must be made to clarify and improve them. Perhaps it can be done since there is as yet no vital conflict of interest between Japan and the United States.

For though we deplore and dislike the war with China, surely it must be clear by this time that it is now our settled policy not to use force on the mainland of Asia. Though once we felt ourselves to be the guardians of Chinese independence and territorial integrity, we no longer accept that responsibility. We feel that 400 million Chinese must in the end defend themselves against 70 million Japanese. Certainly we shall not fight for Russia in Siberia nor for Great Britain in the Yangtse valley or at Hong Kong.

Except that we shall try to protect the lives and minimum rights of American citizens in China, we have in effect given Japan a free hand. Is that not enough? Here is the rub. For if in addition to domination of the Asiatic mainland, Japan wants also the mastery of the Pacific Ocean, then we cannot be complacent.

However pacifist American public opinion may be at this moment, in the long run the American people will not forgive statesmen or leaders of opinion who sit by and permit Japan to achieve naval supremacy throughout the Pacific Ocean. A free hand in Asia is one thing; mastery of the seas is a wholly different thing. And the Japanese government and the Japanese people must not delude themselves into thinking that the American people will not realize the difference, or that they will ever permit themselves to become vulnerable in the Pacific to an Asiatic empire with a huge army and a superior navy as well.

An American Point of View

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman Sentinels of the Republic

Washington, in response to popular insistence, seems recently to be lending a more attentive ear to the problems of the smaller employers and other average producers.

It has heard many protests, varied in nature. But prominent among them has been the demand for freedom to continue their labors without undue harassment and impractical interference from officialdom—however paternal in theory.

This demand may have amazed many politicians, but it didn't surprise the nation as a whole.

It was a typical American point of view, which office-holders who admire the European pattern seem to find difficult to understand. It was the point of view of our pioneer ancestors who carved America out of a wilderness, asking only the right to build their homes and their churches, to raise their families, and to perform their labors, without the intrusion of appointed bureaucrats and destructive tax burdens.

In America, the spirit of self-reliance expressed in that point of view still persists. It is our great national heritage. It should be preserved.

But it cannot be preserved by constant attacks on initiative and enterprise; by proud pointings to the doubtful economic experiments of a frightened Europe; by preachments that the politicians, rather than the people themselves, know best how to conduct the people's business.

It was the people, and not the politicians, who built America.

It is the people, and not the politicians, who know the work to be done, and are eager to continue it.

That is the principle on which our nation was founded, and on which it grew to greatness. It is the principle that Jefferson preached. It is the principle that the average man is trying to impress on Washington.

And when Washington listens to him, and returns sincerely to that fundamental principle, the gates which bar the pathway to recovery will be opened, and America can continue the progress which the strength, the energy and the intelligence of her people assure.

Are Dictatorships So Strong?

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

The chief claim to superiority of the highly centralized, dictatorial governments, is that they represent unity, strength, and the power to move quickly and decisively. Well, do they?

Germany under Hitler is the very prototype of the totalitarian state, with every phase of economic, social and military life theoretically switched into line with a central dominating policy. For five years now, it has published to the world the marvelous story of its inner solidarity. And in those five years, it has had two serious attempts at a coup d'etat, the first resolved in a shocking blood bath—that was in June, 1934—and the second, which occurred last week, resolved, it would seem, in an extremely indecisive compromise.

Exactly what happened in Germany last week is not yet completely clear, but the Basle correspondent of "Le Temps," the Paris newspaper, presented on Sunday, Feb. 6, a version which is credible because of the source. "Le Temps" is the organ of the French heavy industrialists, of the Comité des Forges, which, in turn, is close to the French Ambassador in Berlin, Francois Poncet, and it is possible that the article was inspired from that source. The correspondent states that the Reichswehr differed so radically with the government's agrarian, cultural, industrial and foreign policies, that they were actually planning a coup d'etat, with the object of restoring the monarchy and putting on the throne the second son of the ex-Crown Prince, Prince Louis Ferdinand.

That the Reichswehr has been sharply opposed to the Hitler policies as represented by General Goering and his four-year plan, and his ideas of economic self-sufficiency; by Alfred Rosenberg, with his campaign against the Christian churches and religion; by Walter Darré, with his radical agrarianism, and by Hitler himself, with his anti-Communist pact and his pro-Japanese, pro-Italian orientation in foreign policy, has long been known. The Reichswehr wanted the policies of Dr. Schacht, not those of General Goering. The army chaplains let the world know some weeks ago that the campaign against Christianity was splitting Germany wide open, and would, in their belief, constitute a real threat to morale in case of war. The army is known to disapprove of agrarian policies which threaten to break up the large estates and have alienated many of the peasants also, and the army has never had a high opinion of the Italian alliance, probably because they remember that in the last war the Italians deserted as allies and were an easily conquered enemy.

Its leading officers did not believe that the Hitler-Goering-Goebbels-Rosenberg policies were making Germany strong for war. They believed that Germany would be unable to survive a prolonged war, and that the anti-Communist pact was likely to weaken her by futile and dangerous adventures.

According to "Le Temps," the army was preparing a coup d'etat on January 27 under the chief of staff, General Fritsch, and planned to surround the chancellery, and occupy the strategic points in the capital. The plans, however, were exposed by Heinrich Himmler, the head of the black-uniformed Hitler bodyguards, who is also chief of the Gestapo, the secret political police.

The army, it is seen, if these reports are true, wanted a complete change of basic policy. They wanted to get rid of General von Blomberg, the War Minister, who has always been regarded as a Nazi political commissar; they wanted a new orientation in foreign policy, in the direction of London, Paris and Moscow, and they wanted to see the last of General Goering as economic dictator of Germany.

On June 30, 1934, when Hitler was confronted by a rebellion among the radicals of his own party, he liquidated it drastically by assorted assassinations. This time he has done nothing of the kind. On February 1 he recalled Blomberg. Himmler was allowed to place General Fritsch briefly under arrest, and apparently, in dismissing fourteen generals Hitler has gotten rid of the monarchists. But the story is that he has been forced by the army to make other concessions. He allows the army to retain its autonomy; he prevented the attempts of Goering and Himmler to seize the Ministry of War and kicking Goering upstairs by making him a field marshal, and by putting three generals on the new secret cabinet council, he has given the army a voice in foreign policy. That the policy may change is indicated by the fact that he has withdrawn the ambassadors from Tokio, Rome and Vienna.

It would seem that there has been a tremendous crisis which still leaves Germany severely divided. Hitler has not yet court-martialed generals who were guilty of plotting high treason in Nazi terms.

The totalitarian philosophy would seem to indicate that either the traditional Reichswehr officers should all be removed a la Stalin, or that Goering, Goebbels and Rosenberg should go in the same way. As it is, the struggle will go on, secretly, of course, while the German people are told, with every means of propaganda, that every day in every way they are getting more and more unified and stronger and stronger.

And denied access to the facts the German people will live on rumor and in fear until the next crisis threatens the very foundation of the Nazi state!

If this be unity, hooray for the relative security of democratic dissension!

than any other school, over $100 in all. We won more first prize ribbons than all the other schools put together, including first prizes on white eggs, brown eggs, several on pullets, hens, cocks, and cockerels. First prizes on practically all farm shop projects and several vegetable and crop first prizes.

"In basketball, although the entire first team of five men graduated last June, this year's team has boosted our four year's record of never having lost a league game. We have won the county F. F. A. championship in basketball each year we have been playing under our able teacher and coach, Mr. Finnerty.

"Three members of our chapter attended the state fair and participated in the various events. Several members were on important committees. We won the county Ag. speaking contest with Leland Phillips as our contestant. Harold Wheaton received a prize in a national contest for records on poultry keeping. We put on programs at four granges. Our degree team administered the greenhand degree to the Ag. students at Northside High. We started a news column in the Addison Advertiser which is written by students. We started the Greenwood F. F. A. Chapter and each boy in the fourth year class was required to speak on some topic concerning this work. Other projects were the holding of successful square dances for Ag students and their parents, and maintaining a department for enrollment of members."

Att. Charles L. Crane, representing the Addison Ad. Club as its president spoke to the group as follows:

Representing, as I do tonight, the Advertising Club of Addison—a potent force, a motivating element in all that pertains to our community—an organization that has been behind all, and the originator of many, of the forward movements for the good of the town, village, and surrounding territory in the past twenty years—I greet you in the name of that club.

This club, to cite a few of the instances, has backed with its influence the hard-surface roads in the village and the many farm roads already constructed—stands ready at any time to use all its influence for a continuation of the same as, to state it briefly, it believes in them both for the village and the surrounding country.

This club was full force behind the new school plan which resulted in the present magnificient institution (I say this with pride) which you of the younger generation, as represented here to night, are having the advantage: And not without a great financial sacrifice to those who pay the bills.

This present school was the dream (it seemed only a dream) of a member of the Advertising Club a former president,(Mr. R. S. Brown), which dream after many years of discussion, pleading, and education became a reality, an expensive one, it is true, but, as witnessed here tonight with an Ag School, with a Finnerty to run it, a Bill Colburn to speak for it, (as well as the many other departments) is well worth the effort and the continued sacrifice of the folks of this community. The Ad Club has been potent in this life. It is not a penal force. We issue no edicts. We enforce no laws. We advocate high incentives—a happy and noble fellowship. Here we are undaunted of purpose and with high hopes for the future not only in our community but for all the world.

In this community we are all citizens (Catholic, Protestants, and Jews, enjoying equally the incomparable benefits which our republic offers.

Now, so lofty a privilege entails heavy obligations. We must keep before our eyes the aim of the United States Constitution, namely, the insurance of justice for all—and the duty of the individual to add to the common welfare. If we fail as boys and men to contribute our full personal share to the continuance of the democratic spirit in which this country was cradled and nurtured, we are recreant to our trust.

This is the spirit of the Club which extends its greeting and best wishes to you all.

The F. F. orchestra was introduced following the recital of the F. F. A. creed by William Stewart. Included in the orchestra were Kenneth Root, Warren Perkins, Bert Mills, Win Strait, John Cole, Ellsworth Tompkins, and James Hall, soloist. A number of Hill Billy selections were given which brought a big hand from the audience.

Clifford Lunger gave a reading, Henry Ford's Old Pal. A short skit was put on by Dorothy Fenton, Ken Dann and Joe Thompson.

Kenneth Armstrong told of having been a member of the first F. F. A. chapter in New York State. The chapter was organized in 1920 with a small group of boys. "That chapter has grown." said Mr. Armstrong, "To an active membership of 100,000 and has an alumni membership of one half million. My advice to you boys is to go ahead, strive, get as much out of the F. F. A. as you possibly can. But to get as much as you can out of it, you must put as much in it as you can.

"The educational facilities of the state and of the nation are being taxed to the utmost because of the demand of you boys that you may become better educated. And dads, don't forget these boys are offering a great challenge to you! It is up to you to help, that your sons and your neighbors' sons may have the best chance.

"The challenge to all of us is to go forward for a more uniform agriculture. That means cooperation. Not merely cooperation in the sense of merchandising, though that is my own line. But we must cooperate in many ways to bring agriculture to its highest plane and remember the very first industry in the world was agriculture."

Mr. Orvis prefaced his address by a few remarks in which he recalled meeting with the Addison Board of Education about six years ago to help start the school course in agriculture. "If I were a clergyman and were to take a text," "Mr. Orvis said, it would be: 'Even this shall pass away.'

In considering the future there is only one thing of which we can be sure—change. Whatever else may happen we can be sure that things will be different tomorrow from today, next year from this, and 30 years from now, when you are your father's age, you will be living in a world as different from the present as today is from that of 30 years ago.

"The statement is often made that greater changes have come during the last 30 years than in all the 10,000 years of previously recorded history of man. What are some of these changes that have occurred in the past 30 years?

"We have left the horse and buggy—the automobile was not on the market in 1900. All our hard surfaced roads have been laid since that time. The development of the airplane—the first successful flight being made in this span of time and the record now is 10 hours to California. The telephone was just beginning to be used and the radio was unheard of. Electric lights were a novelty—moving pictures were not yet on the market. We have seen the development of the modern disc plows, combine harvester, tractor, truck, milking machine and other farm machinery that was not yet produced 30 years ago. Then there have come electric refrigeration, tank cars, and tank trucks for shipping milk, Federal Land Banks, Farm and Home Bureaus, 4H Clubs were not yet started as well as high school departments of agriculture. The State College of Agriculture at Cornell was not established for another four years.

And so we could go on, almost indefinitely, it would seem, listing those inventions and developments in science, medicine, agriculture, conservation, business, transportation, education and what not, but time prevents.

But what of the future? Without attempting to forecast, for I'm no soothsayer, we may be sure that with the rapidity of present day invention and development that we have but made a beginning upon the improvements that are yet to come. So called luxuries of today will be necessities of tomorrow, while the changes that will be made will render our lives as increasingly complex as today is compared with that of our ancesters.

The statement is often made that each wave of prosperity—The cotton gin, and textile machinery-discovery of gold and the opening up of the agricultural west in the 1850s, railroads following the Civil War,—automobile and industrial booms since the war, have been accompanied by eras of full employment and prosperity. They say, if we are to again reemploy the large number now out of work if we are to start up the many great mills now standing idle and use our tremendous supplies of power and minerals, then we must produce some new product that will have universal demand and still remain cheap enough to be within the reach of all, as has the automobile during the past 20 years.

Let us briefly consider what some of these possibilities are.

One group believes that our greatest advance in the next 20 years will be in housing. Better houses, produced in large numbers and cheap enough to be available to all.

The average price of an automobile declined from $1,662 in 1909 to $678 in 1934. Moreover, during this period the quality has greatly increased despite the fact that cost of materials has advanced, wages more than doubled, and number employed increased by several thousand per cent. Still the price has decreased due to constant rapid advance in efficiency in factory methods and management.

On the other hand, the cost of a one-family house has increased from $2,173 in 1909 to $4,966 in 1934, with no steady improvement in quality, as with automobiles.

However, great strides have been made during the past three years, with the result the house of tomorrow will be not only cheap, but it will be a marvel of comfort and convenience.

It will be built of steel and glass. The air we breathe will be purified and heated before it enters the room. Heat will be controlled by electricity with no resulting changes in temperature and no hot and cold spots in the room. Mother will have a new deal in the kitchen. Her walls will be of glass her tables and sinks will be of rustless and stainless monel metal, her cooking, baking, dishwashing etc. will be done by electricity. And among the hundreds of new gadgets now on the market is a steam pressure cooker that cooks a 5 pound roast in 5 minutes, new types of refrigerators colored enamel designs in milk bottles, dough slicing devices for making sliced bread, waterproof wallpapers, glass curtains, dishes that can be thrown without breaking, shoepolish applied like lipstick and lollypops with flexible handles. These are but a few of the things already on the market,what the future holds is bekond the realm of imagination.

Another important development—Television. Thousands of experimenters are now working on it, N. B. C. Radio City is already wired for it.

Railroads are keeping pace. New trains streamlined, air conditioned and luxurious. Twice speed, one sixth weight, one-fifth power, one-half cost.

One single type of airplane has raised speed from 120 to 200 miles per hour on air lines. (440--600. Bending radio beam).

Another great development, that of developing materials from the cellulose of plants--that woody material that we have considered as waste in the past. (In hay and grain).

One laboratory in New Hampshire has developed a material from the spruce tree called SOLKA, that has such a multitude of uses that one gets giddy trying to keep up with them.

It is used in plastics, in artificial wood, in roofing, towels, hospital surgical dressings, yarn, rugs, water and gas pipe, delicate jewelry, paper, shoes, rayon silk, tooth fillings, flux for welding, wicker furniture and many others. Yet this material is less than three years old. Think of its future possibilities.

In the west, corstalks, corncobs and straw are the great agriculture waste. Still these contain about ½ or 48% cellulose, and many companies are now being developed for their use.

One new material is FURFURAL, a colorless, odorless motor fuel—Maizewood Products Co. of Iowa makes wall board, rayon from cornstalks. Quaker Oats Co.,—woodflour, wallboard, wrapping paper from oat hulls. Calif. Packing Co.—valuable charcoals, perfumes, acids and carbons from fruit pits—such as peach pits etc.

Once in the manufacturing of sugar the pulp of cane or beet was waste. Now the Celotex Co. has developed the waste in the manufacturing of various acids, rayon silk and wallboard until the waste is now more valuable than the sugar itself.

Until recent years the soybean was imported from China largely as a fad although it had some livestock feeding value. But the seed, rich oily beans, were considered largely as waste. Then investigation proved that the oil content of the bean ran 20-30%, which meant a great new source of vegetable oils. The paint companies experimented and found it made the whitest of white paints, and one of the best bases of paint manufacture. Then Henry Ford and the government set up experimental stations (used in automobile manufacturing) etc. The result of all of this has been an increase of several millions of acres of the crop, with resulting millions of dollars in the farmers' pockets.

I have mentioned but a few of the mountain range of new things that are developing. DuPont Co. has 109 new articles, U. S. Rubber over 50 new rubber goods.

Milk plants at Bainbridge, N. Y. make pencils, buttons, steering wheels, piano keys, wall switches, telephone receivers, imitation jewels etc.

Still another field of activity that might be mentioned is in the field of social science. Until our American Revolution and the seting up of our American Republic, there had been little fundamental change in government and social relationship in 1800 years. Then the Constitution of the U. S. guaranteed every white man political and religious freedom. The next great step followed the Civil War when equality of man, regardless of race or color was conceded. Then in 1920 women's rights were recognized along with man, and now another great movement is under way, throughout the world-that of guaranteeing an opportunity to do an honest day's work and for it receive an honest living.

Italy under its Facism, Russia under the Soviet, Germany under Hitler, England with its managed currency, and we with our governmental measures are all striving for the same goal.

Regardless as to whether or not you agree with the present government policies of the NRA, the AAA, PWA and the rest (and there are many with which I do not agree) they are here to stay. Not in their present form, for they will be modified as time goes on, but more active government participation is, and will continue to be a part of our life, regardless of the party in power. We have gone too far in the opposite direction to retrace our steps.

Now, what will be your place in this changing future of ours? To you sons I would suggest but two things.

1. Prepare yourself for the changes as they may occur. "But", you say, "how are we to know what the future is to bring"? It matters not. Thetrained man will adjust himself and meet the problem as it arises. During this past depression the trained man, for the most part, has been able to adjust himself in some other line of work. True, he has often lost his job and been out of work, but not for long. It is the man without training who has been continually unemployed and on relief.

In thinking of training we are likely to think merely of "going to school", and this cannot be too strongly emphasized. Stay in school as long as you can. It will pay. Studies made throughout the state show that the graduate of a State School of Agriculture or from the College of Agriculture make twice as much as the one that graduates from high school and over 6 times as much as the graduate of the 8th grade. BUT after you finish school, don't think that your training period is over. It has just begun. Training while on the job is just as important, or more so than training while in school.

"How may I get this?" Books, magazines, newspapers, bulletins, experiment station results, short courses, the farm bureau, the radio and many others. The opportunity is great, if you will take advantage of it.

Dr. Caswell Ellis, Director of Cleveland College:

2. The other point that I would like to make in closing is to know yourself, and then have confidence in your ability. Scientists say that we use less than 25% of the abilities that Nature gave us. Either we do not attempt more, or we become too easily satisfied with what we have.

Be grateful in the morning for the day that lies before
Be grateful in the evening that you still have strength in store
What if you come a failure home, there's rest when you get in,
And those that keep their faith in you believe you're going to win.
The coward wears his failures long,
and lets them weigh him down
And so with sullen eyes he goes,
forever through the town.
He thinks th egods have picked him out as one to trample low
So he's a beaten man before his rival strikes a blow.
Be grateful for the dawning day
and all that it may bring,
Don't carry yesterdays about, like buttons on a string.
Press forward to the field once
, more, one victory's all you need,
You'll laugh at failures you have had the minute you succeed.
The fighting heart may someday win, the quitter never can,
There's many a battle turns upon the spirit of a man.
And who begins the day with faith, despite all failures past,
May see the tide of victory turn and roll his way, at last.

Such foods as macaroni and noodles should be removed from the fire as soon as they are tender, then drained, and cold water immediately dashed over them.

One quart of milk gives about the same amount of calcium as five oranges, five apples, five servings of canned peas, or one head of cabbage.

To test chesse for ripeness, place a small piece in your mouth. If it is ripe enough it will melt; green cheese will remain hard.

Sentinels of Health

Don't Neglect Them!

Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure.

When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out.

Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance.

The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.
